Pipelines threaten preserved lands

Pipeline proposals that threaten preserved land and other natural resources are popping up all across New Jersey.

Spurred by the booming fracking industry west of us, these lines - which cut through the New Jersey Highlands, the Pine Barrens and the Delaware River watershed - are now a serious threat to our state's natural heritage.

PRESERVED LANDS TARGETED

New pipelines are being proposed through preserved farmland and parks, threatening to destroy natural resources and erode public investment in land preservation.

Preserved lands must be defended from new intrusions. These linear developments fragment forests, segment preserved farms, put waterways at risk, and further our dependence on fossil fuels.

THE NEWEST THREAT

The PennEast pipeline is slated to cross the Delaware River into Hunterdon and Mercer counties, running across preserved farms, forests and vital public drinking water supply streams, on its way to Trenton.

Holland, Alexandria, Kingwood, Delaware and West Amwell townships in Hunterdon County will be directly impacted, as will Hopewell Township in Mercer County.

New Jersey Conservation Foundation is working with partners at the local, state and federal level to defend preserved lands from these new pipeline proposal and find better solutions.

WHAT YOU CAN DO

- If you are a landowner who has received notification that the pipeline may impact your property, you have the right to deny pipeline employees and consultants access. If you have already given permission for access to your property, you may rescind it. To learn more about the FERC pipeline permitting process, go to <http://lawofficesofcarolynelefant.com/> and click on the fourth document on the right side of the page: "Knowing and Protecting Your Rights When an Interstate Gas Pipeline Comes to Your Community." *

- If you are a concerned citizen and want to learn about impacts on your local community, contact your municipality and your state legislators. To find your district's legislators, go to <http://www.njleg.state.nj.us/members/legsearch.asp>.

- If you want to jump in and help stop these pipelines in New Jersey, you can contact the Delaware Riverkeeper Network at <http://www.delawareriverkeeper.org/act-now/urgent-details.aspx?id=172>.
